In the early part of the 20th Century, remote areas of this land were being connected by cast iron, wood, and steel. Michael has taken work on a railroad being built through the wilderness of northern Quebec. The building must stop for the winter and he and another worker, Jerome, have volunteered to remain at the camp to guard a partially constructed bridge. They will spend the next few months isolated with the exception of further provisions being delivered by a Priest just before Christmas. In their solitude, the two men are tempted and tested and their sanity stretched as ghosts from their past return to play tricks, tempt, and demand retribution.
